

The money leak checklist

9 quiet places a small business loses money, and how to catch each one.

None of these feel dramatic on the day. Added up over a month, they are real money, and every one of them is the kind of repetitive checking nobody in a busy business has time to do. Run down the list. Tick the ones you cannot honestly say are covered right now.

- ☐ 1. Invoices marked paid that never actually landed
Match your ledger against the bank, not against itself. A paid flag is not a payment.
- ☐ 2. Overdue invoices nobody chased
List everything past its terms every week. The ones that go quiet are the ones that get written off.
- ☐ 3. No-shows and cancellations never followed up
Every empty slot that was booked is recoverable revenue if someone offers it to the next person fast.
- ☐ 4. Duplicate or double supplier payments
Cross-check supplier invoices against what you have already paid before the next run goes out.
- ☐ 5. Quotes and prices that do not match the invoice
Spot-check that what you quoted is what you billed. Small gaps repeat across every job.
- ☐ 6. Subscriptions and renewals that quietly lapsed or auto-renewed unused
Keep one list of every recurring charge and renewal date. Review it monthly, not never.
- ☐ 7. Stock that moved without a matching sale
Reconcile stock movements against sales. A gap is either a missed sale or a leak on the shelf.
- ☐ 8. Customer statements that stopped matching your books
Line the customer's statement up against your ledger. This is the check that most often turns up real money.
- ☐ 9. Refunds and credits issued but never reconciled
Track every credit note to the end. Money given back that is not recorded shows up as a mystery later.
